If an electrical injury happened at work in Atlanta, there is usually more than one responsible party.

A site has an owner, a general contractor, the electrical sub, sometimes the utility, occasionally an equipment maker, and sometimes a staffing agency. Each has different insurance and different incentives to point at the others.

Workers compensation pays medical bills and a portion of lost income when the injury is work related, and it prevents you from suing the employer directly. It does not bar a claim against a third party whose conduct created the hazard.

The claim against the other company is Check out the post right here normally where the meaningful money is, because comp does not pay for pain, disfigurement, or the full economic loss of a career that ended early.

Working out who was responsible means getting the contracts, the safety plan and the daily logs, none of which an injured worker can obtain by asking.

Flanagan Law, P.C. is a personal injury trial firm in Atlanta, Georgia.

Electrical burns are systematically undervalued early. Cardiac effects show up over months, long after the initial bill is written. Since fault is usually not seriously disputed, the insurer knows from the start it will pay, and the strategy shifts to paying before the long term picture exists.

How much does a personal injury lawyer cost in Atlanta?

Most personal injury lawyers in Georgia work on a contingency fee, which means the fee comes out of the recovery instead of out of pocket. There is no attorney fee if there is no recovery. Flanagan Law, P.C. handles Atlanta injury cases on a contingency fee and does not charge for the first conversation, so an injured person can find out where they stand before deciding anything.

How long do I have to file an injury claim in Georgia?

Georgia generally gives an injured person two years from the date of the injury to file a personal injury lawsuit, and a claim against a city, county or state agency can require written notice far sooner than that. Waiting also makes proof harder to collect, because records and camera footage do not last forever. Flanagan Law, P.C. reviews the deadlines that apply to a specific Atlanta case at no cost.

What should I do after a truck accident in Atlanta?

Get medical care, report the wreck, and avoid giving a recorded statement to the trucking company's insurer before you talk to a lawyer. Trucking companies often send their own investigators to the scene within hours, and evidence such as onboard data and camera footage can be overwritten or lost in days. Flanagan Law, P.C. moves early in truck cases to preserve that evidence.

Do I have to go to court for a personal injury case?

Most injury claims settle without a trial. The cases that settle well are usually the ones the other side believes will actually be tried. Flanagan Law, P.C. is a trial firm, and Brendan Flanagan has tried cases to verdict in Georgia courts, including a $99.9 million wrongful death verdict in Fulton County. Past results do not guarantee or predict a similar outcome in any future case.

Who can be held responsible in a commercial truck wreck?

Responsibility can reach past the driver to the trucking company, a maintenance contractor, a freight broker, or the company that loaded the trailer. Each one is a separate question with its own proof. Flanagan Law, P.C. investigates every party that may share responsibility in an Atlanta commercial vehicle case.

What is my injury case worth?

No honest lawyer can put a number on a case before reading the medical records and understanding how the injury changed a person's life and work. Value depends on the treatment, the lasting effects, who was at fault, and the coverage available. Flanagan Law, P.C. will walk through those pieces with an injured person in Atlanta before anyone signs anything.
