Divorce Attorney Fairfax VA Initial Consultation What to Expect Taking the first step toward legal representation in a divorce can feel uncertain, and understanding what to expect from an initial consultation with The Irving Law Firm - Fairfax Divorce Lawyers helps prospective clients approach that first meeting with greater confidence and use the time productively. The firm's approach to the initial consultation is designed to give clients a clear and realistic picture of their situation and options, not to sell them on a particular course of action. At the initial consultation, the attorney will listen to the client's description of their situation: the length of the marriage, the nature of the marital assets and debts, whether children are involved, what the other spouse's position appears to be, and what the client's primary concerns and goals are. This listening phase is important because every divorce is different, and the advice that follows needs to be tailored to the actual circumstances rather than based on generic assumptions about what a Fairfax County divorce involves. The attorney will then explain the relevant aspects of Virginia law, including the separation requirement, the grounds for divorce, the applicable approach to equitable distribution, how child custody would be determined, and how support obligations work. This explanation is given in plain language so that the client understands their rights The original source and obligations clearly without needing a legal background to follow it.
