Allergy sufferers in the Roanoke Valley know the calendar well. Tree pollen hits hard in early spring, grasses follow in late spring and early summer, and ragweed arrives in late summer and fall. Surrounded by wooded ridges, the valley can feel like it never fully gets a break. Indoors, the dust and pollen that settle on surfaces can keep symptoms going long after you close the windows. A regular cleaning service that pays attention to dust traps can help.

Some of the worst offenders are the places most people overlook. Blinds collect a remarkable amount of dust on every slat. Ceiling fans gather a thick layer on the top of each blade, which is then flung around the local cleaning company Roanoke room when the fan is turned on. Window sills catch pollen that blows in, and baseboards collect dust that drifts down from everywhere else. The Happy Housekeepers includes dusting window sills, baseboards, blinds and ceiling fans on its standard residential checklist.

Those details are combined with the core tasks that keep allergens under control: dusting and polishing furniture, vacuuming carpets, mopping hard-surface floors and removing cobwebs. For homes with heavy allergy concerns, weekly or bi-weekly visits are usually more effective than monthly ones, since dust and pollen have less time to accumulate. The office can recommend a frequency during your free, no-obligation estimate.
