Newer houses get roof problems too, they just get different ones. The estates of Pentwyn and Pontprennau went up between the 1970s and the 1990s, and many of those roofs are now old enough to need proper attention. Redland roofers cardiff Roofing Cardiff, a family-owned roofing contractor, is based a few minutes away on Trecinon Road in Rumney, which makes these neighbourhoods about as local as it gets for John Owen and his team. Most homes on these estates have concrete interlocking tiles. The tiles themselves are tough, but the way the edges and ridges were finished can let them down. Many were built with mortar-bedded verges along the gable ends and mortar-bedded ridge tiles along the top. After thirty or forty years of Cardiff weather, that mortar cracks and falls out in chunks, sometimes into the garden or onto the drive. Once the mortar goes, wind can lift the tiles and rain can get in. Fitting dry verge caps is a neat, lasting fix, as they clip over the tile edges and don't rely on mortar at all. Ridge tiles can be re-bedded or replaced, and vent covers fitted where ventilation needs improving. Pentwyn and Pontprennau homes often have other features that need care: timber or early uPVC fascias and soffits that have faded or rotted, guttering that sags at the joints, and flat-roofed garages and porches finished in felt. Flat roof replacement using an EPDM rubber membrane over new tongue-and-groove sterling board decking suits these well. Conservatory roof replacement is popular too, especially on houses where an older conservatory is freezing in winter and roasting in summer. Being so close to the Rumney base, the team can often get out the same day or next, which is exactly what customers on Google mention most.
