Hardware store shelves in Roanoke are lined with sprays, baits, foggers and traps, and it is tempting to try fixing a pest problem yourself. For a few ants on the counter or a single spider in the garage, that can work. For many other problems, though, do it yourself efforts cost more in the long run. Perdue Exterminators, which has served the Roanoke Valley since 1969, sees the results of failed home treatments regularly.

Termites are the biggest example. Eastern subterranean termites live underground and travel through hidden mud tubes, so spraying the swarmers or visible wood does nothing to the colony. Meanwhile, the damage continues out of sight. A professional inspection by Perdue's licensed exterminators identifies where termites are entering and what is attracting them, and termite elimination comes with renewable annual warranties. Estimates are free, so there is little reason to pest control company Roanoke guess.

Bed bugs are another problem where https://cesarlntd647.wpsuo.com/perdue-exterminators-reviews-what-roanoke-customers-say home remedies often backfire. Foggers and over the counter sprays tend to scatter bed bugs deeper into walls and into other rooms, making the infestation harder to treat. Perdue offers a free bed bug inspection and consultation, confirming the problem and how far it has spread before treatment begins.

Where DIY Falls Short

German cockroaches can develop resistance to common consumer products, and repellent sprays can split ant colonies into several new ones. Rodent poisons from the store pose risks to pets and often leave rodents dying inside walls. Perdue's rodent control uses baits and traps that do not rely on toxic poisons, combined with sealing entry points so the problem does not repeat.

Diagnosis is the hidden value of professional service. Perdue's insect identification and inspection of the home's environment and construction often reveal the underlying cause, such as a damp crawl space, gaps around utility lines or wood touching soil. Fixing those causes is how the company aims to stop pest problems at the source.

Homeowners can still help with prevention by keeping food sealed, fixing leaks and trimming vegetation back from the house. Those habits work best alongside professional service rather than in place of it, and a technician can tell you which steps matter most for your particular home.
