The Origins of the Confederate Flag

The first legitimate flag of the Confederate States changed into adopted in 1861. Known effectively because the "Stars and Bars," this flag bore 3 horizontal stripes—two crimson and one white—with a blue canton that includes stars representing the seceding states. However, this design proved confusing all the way through war as a result of its resemblance to the Union flag. Consequently, various iterations accompanied until eventually the greater recognizable conflict flags emerged.

The maximum noted variation is typically known as the "Southern Cross." This edition elements a blue saltire (diagonal pass) embellished with white stars on a crimson heritage. It used to be first utilized by General P.G.T. Beauregard in the time of the First Battle of Bull Run in 1861 and directly have become associated with countless Confederate sets throughout the conflict.

The Evolution During Wartime

As the conflict advanced, different navy instruments adopted extraordinary designs that contemplated their nearby identities although retaining factors of traditional Southern symbolism. For example, some regiments included battle honors into their flags or extra amazing insignia that denoted their exclusive fighting records.

Flags served not purely as identification throughout the time of battles however also as symbols of harmony amongst troops. Soldiers could rally around their colorations, discovering motivation and camaraderie of their shared cause against Union forces. This emotional attachment contributed to how these flags have been perceived submit-struggle.
