

How Contingency Fees Work With a Midland Car Accident Lawyer You pay nothing up front. That's the short answer, and for most people recovering from a wreck on Interstate 20 or Loop 250, it's the one that matters most. The Doan Law Firm handles car accident cases on a contingency fee, which means the firm's fee comes out of the recovery if it wins your case. If there's no recovery, you owe no attorney fee. The firm puts it simply: $0 unless we win. How is the fee figured? A contingency fee is a percentage of the money recovered through a Midland personal injury lawyer settlement or verdict. The exact percentage, and how case costs are handled, should be spelled out in a written agreement before any work begins. Read it, and ask questions about anything that isn't clear. A good firm will walk you through the terms in plain language. Reviewers of the firm's Midland office often mention that staff explained their options and the law clearly, and that kind of clarity should extend to the fee agreement too. Why do injury lawyers work this way? Mostly because the people who need them are often the least able to pay hourly rates. After a serious crash you may be off work, facing bills from Midland Memorial Hospital and waiting on an insurance company that is in no hurry. A contingency fee lets you hire a Midland car accident lawyer based on the strength of your case, not the size of your bank account. It also gives the firm a direct reason to push for the fullest recovery the facts support. The firm's interests and yours point in the same direction. If the case isn't worth pursuing, a lawyer working this way has every reason to tell you so honestly at the start, rather than bill you for months of work.
