- Preventive healthcare
- Specialist appointments

Types of California Group Health Insurance Plans

Small businesses have several health insurance plan options. Understanding the differences between these plans helps employers choose coverage that matches their workforce needs.

Health Maintenance Organization (HMO) Plans

HMO plans typically require members to use a network of healthcare providers and select a primary care physician. These plans may offer predictable costs and coordinated care through provider networks.

Preferred Provider Organization (PPO) Plans

PPO plans generally provide more flexibility when choosing healthcare providers. Employees may have the option to visit both in-network and out-of-network providers, although out-of-network care may involve higher costs.

Exclusive Provider Organization (EPO) Plans

EPO plans combine some features of HMO and PPO plans. They usually require members to use a specific provider network but may not require referrals for specialists.

High Deductible Health Plans (HDHPs)

High deductible plans typically have lower monthly premiums but higher out-of-pocket costs before insurance coverage begins. These plans may be paired with health savings accounts when available.
